Precarious Potted Plants

Albert Allgaier and Lena Sieder-Semlitsch spent February 2020 in Mumbai, India, documenting Precarious Potted Plants. The result is an archive of precarious sculptures maintained by clandestine care-takers, turning the pots into pedestals and transforming the plants themselves into negotiators between the liminal space of public and private.

A SMALL
SNACK
SELECTION
by albert allgaier

A small snack selection

Snacks - in japanese スナック - are proto-immersive art installations. Their enigmatic façades are portals to interstellar time capsules, which contain decades of songs, gallons of tears and billions of Yen.

Ein staatlich geförderter Didgeridoo-Workshop in einem Hinterhof

Walter Rosenkranz, former spokesman of cultural affairs for the Austrian right wing party FPÖ, used a fictitious STATE FUNDED DIDGERIDOO WORKSHOP IN A BACKYARD (= Ein staatlich geförderter Didgeridoo-Workshop in einem Hinterhof) in an interview with the austrian newspaper Der Standard on 20th September 2017 as a negative metaphor to illustrate his opinion on cultural politics and funding. The artist collective GRUPPE UNO WIEN took this statement literally and realized a Didgeridoo Workshop in the backyard of WUK, a former squat turned into a cultural center, with financial support from the cultural funds of the City of Vienna.

Karlos Kasteneder

Peter Fritzenwallner and Christoph Srb ate magic truffles, assembled IKEA furniture kits and recited textbooks about carpentry and color theory juxtaposed with the works of Carlos Castaneda. The performance had a cyclical format: audience members could select the next furniture kit to be assembled and join the performance under the premise of consuming the same mushrooms. The performance ended when all the magic truffles were eaten.
